

REGISTERED NEIGHBORHOOD ORGANIZATIONS

Strong neighborhoods are foundational to addressing our vacancy challenge and neighborhoods are stronger when they are organized to address common problems, advocate, and plan. Many cities have a process for these kinds of neighborhood groups to be officially recognized by the city, and that recognition typically includes certain support as well as a consistent and predictable way for residents to participate in decisions affecting the neighborhood.

A Registered Neighborhood Organization (RNO) system is a practical solution to the City's need for more equitable and effective community engagement because it increases opportunities for city agencies to efficiently communicate with neighborhoods and respond to neighborhood concerns. It also provides more opportunities for city agencies to get broader resident participation in public meetings and other city processes.

Currently, neighborhoods have unequal opportunities to participate in decision-making and uneven access to information. For example, most neighborhood groups have no formal input into development and demolition decisions but some do. A RNO system would level the playing field by ensuring equal recognition and access to information, and it also creates more organized, transparent, and predictable opportunities for collaboration between city agencies and residents.

Primary Deliverables

- Develop a framework for formal recognition of neighborhood organizations to create a stronger ecosystem that is responsive to community needs
- Robust guide to best practices based on research on RNO systems established in other cities
- Strong relationships and collaboration with city agencies to support implementation
- Stakeholder and community engagement to guide development
- Facilitate collaborative use and improvement of the Community Organizations map that catalogues variety of existing organizations

How we got here:

Formerly the Neighborhood Engagement and then the Recognized Community Organizations working group, our group has worked to help others understand the vacancy challenge, the tools to address the problem, and the opportunities for inclusive and equitable investment to foster vibrancy in all neighborhoods and how best to encourage community engagement and efforts to build the capacity of residents to work collectively.

Who we are:

The RNO project group is made up of a variety of volunteers, including neighborhood residents, professional-types, City agency representatives, members of SLACO, Legal Services of Eastern Missouri, SLU Law, the Federation of Block Units, and others. Last year, the RNO group merged with another group of volunteers who are responsible for developing and helping to maintain the Community Organizations map. The RNO group now works on both the RNO framework and the Community Organizations map.

STL NEIGHBORHOOD MAP

MAP LIST

Welcome to the map!

We're mapping neighborhood associations, community development corporations, and community building organizations that have specific footprints in the St. Louis metro area. (See our definitions to understand our criteria for inclusion.)

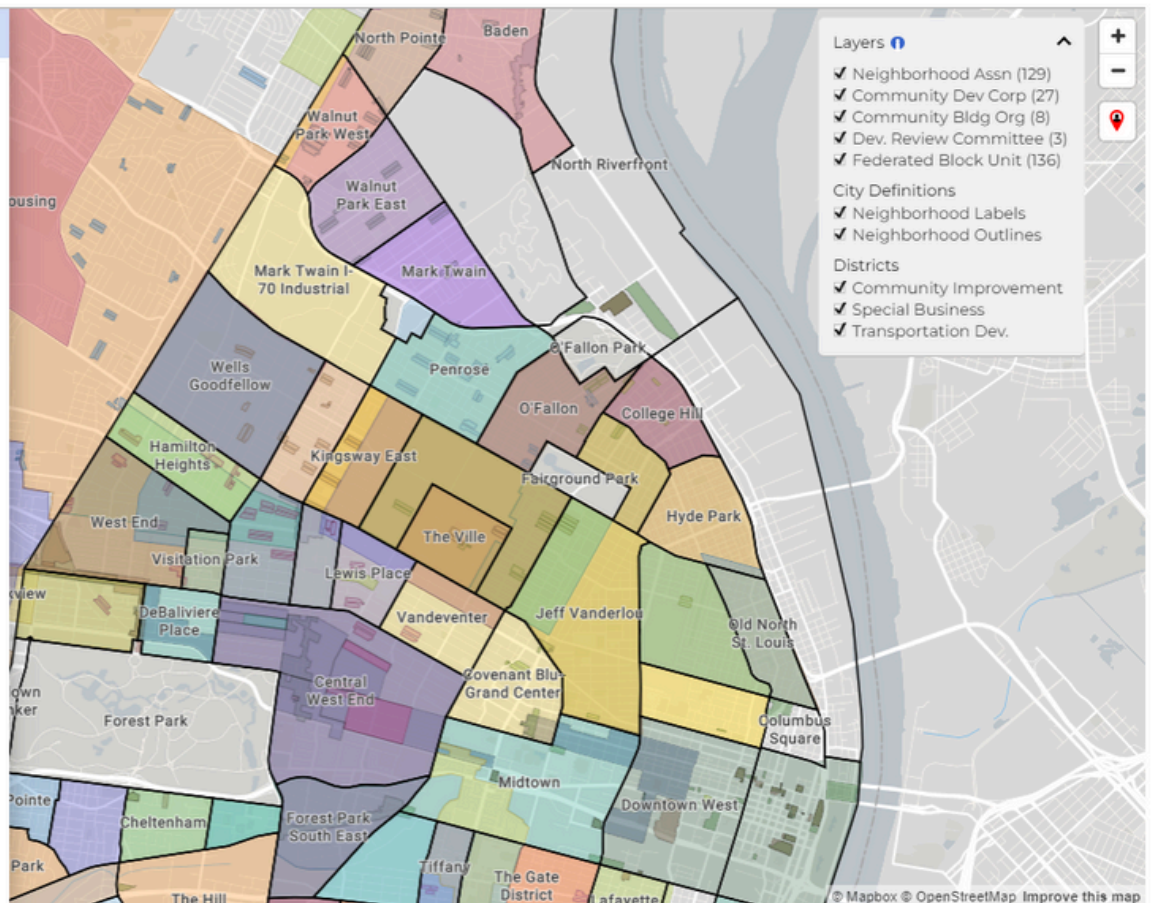

The map has been created to empower neighborhood residents to work collectively, encourage coordination and collaboration, and facilitate quality community engagement.
